SOCIETY AND FASHION - PARLOR
KITCHEN AND NURSERY.

IN MAIDENLY WHITE.

The Trials and Tribulations of a De-butante—Revivification.

[New York Cor. Inter Ocean.]

Much in the nature of a theatrical debut is the introduction of a young New York girl into that particular portion of society in which the doings are laboriously formal. The ceremony beats christening all hollow, and can only be excused in importance by a marriage. The girl is 16 to 17. Up to this night she has been technically a child; now she suddenly becomes a woman, according to the usages of fashion. It may be that a reception is given by her parents for the purpose, but likelier she "comes out" as the phrase is, at one of the small balls called assemblies which occur in the halls connected with the great restaurants. These gatherings usually include a clique of 100 couples, or at most 120, and are managed by a body of matrons whose social position will be a sort of label guaranteeing genuine high quality. There may be several debutantes; but if only one, then she is regarded as peculiarly fortunate, for on her converges about all of the interest.

She is dressed in maidenly white, and the material is correspondingly simple, though the making up of the muslin may have absorbed more money than is embodied in some of the gorgeous satins. She must not wear diamonds, and her arms and bosom should not be so freely uncovered as are those of her elder sisters, especially if they have the screwdrivers common to youth. But she must be so lavishly frosted with flowers, from chin to waist, that she seems to be looking over a garden wall. The theory is that these are the floral offerings of young beauty; but, as with the bouquets which so surprise an actress, the cynics among the spectators are incredulous. With certain kinds of rare rosebuds costing $1 apiece, it is as easy to load a girl with $500 worth, counting in the numerous bunches which she in alternation carries in her hands.

"How do you feel?"

The question was put by a fond mamma to her debutante daughter as she entered the hall; and I carried the reply in my mind only until I could get into an ante-room to write it down, so well did it reveal the artificiality which fashion imposes on a mere child.

"O, I'm awfully afraid I'm not looking my best," said the young creature, "and I'm so nervous that I shake like an overboarded ship. I am going to be awkward—I know I am; and I shall make a failure. In a girl who ought to have been a careless merry-maker, Doubtless she had been in strict training for the event, like a pugilist for a fight. Hard lessons in dancing and deportment, arduous drilling in the art of small talk, much practice of facial expression before her mirror, and tedious experiences with a dressmaker had brought her into condition for what, so she had been led to believe, was a most serious feat. Do you suspect that I am exaggerating? Why, I personally know of a case in which a delicate girl, having been "trained down too fine," and therefore liable to be worn instead of fresh in appearance, was sent to a Turkish bath in the afternoon of the debut, where she was steamed, sprayed, and rubbed, after which she was put to bed at home for a sleep of two hours, with the result that she finally showed herself in a state of revivification resembling the bright and rosy-cheeked health of a millmaid.

It Might Have Been Worse.

[Time-Kill Club.]

"My friend," said Brother Gardner, as he stood up in a new swallow-tailed coat and exhibited a shirt-front over which a Chinese washerman had struggled for about two days, "do you ever find fast away and a few more days will see the last of 1884. While we stay here in the red blush of health, some of our number has been taken away with cholera morbus, fallen off de'woodshed, an' varus odor vindictive diseases. We has much to be thankful for, fur, G. BURGESS, and where everything in the line of SMOCKERS' ARTICLES can be found, of the best quality.
